THE AFTERMATH SIGHTS AND INCIDENT WHICH FOLLOWED THE FIRE

A Dismal Picture of the Wreckage and Waste in Fires Path

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.—Standing in any of the many breadlines one may see curious and diversified humanity in all its forms. Friday a long line stretched from one of the relief stations and moved slowly, slowly, upward, as the foremost received his rations and stepped out. One man, richly dressed, and known all over California as one of the wealthiest bankers of the United States, stood in his place, supporting himself with his gold-headed cane shifting his weight from one foot to the other, as he waited for his turn to receive food, for his family. When he reached the head of the line, and the soldier ordered him roughly to take his two loaves of bread, the old gentleman, with a smile of satisfaction, took his two loaves under his arm and stepped contentedly along the street toward his ruined home. It was I. W. Hell-man, president of more banks and trust corporations than any other one man on the Pacific Coast. The man who made $10,000,000 coups with as little effort and as much zest as the most glorified apostle of Frenzied Finance. He laughed, as he said that to receive those two loaves of bread gave him more satisfaction than to sell a whole city street railroad.

A Dismal Picture

The most dreadful, dismal, harrowing and ghostly sound that can be heard is that of a swinging iron cornice that flapped weird and uncanny against the ruined brick walls yet standing. They filled the air with their terrible clanking and sounded like the groan of some ghoul of disaster, exulting over his terrible handwork. They destroy sleep and irritate the walking past all endurance.
Around one area, where are encamped several men and women the men of the party have spent almost their entire time for several days in efforts to remove this horrible reminder, in order that they may, with less harrowed nerves, pass one comfortable night. In the midst of the ruins, away from the noise of the trampling hundreds that pour continuously down Market street, no sound is heard but the buzzard-like reminder of the holocaust that has ruined the greatest the noisiest, the busiest, the most beautiful city on the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

Out at Portsmouth Square some goods and chattels have been gathered and piled around the Stevenson monument, where they are guarded night and day by police and soldiers.
The pawn shops that once faced the square on the Kearney street side have been a rich field for the searchers for relics. Some of them were not entirely consumed and in the ashes may be found gold and silver ornaments, and all sorts of valuable remains.

Four Chinamen walked along the ruins of Kearney street one evening and one continued to dart from the group into the ruins and come back smuggling something beneath his blouse. At last he was seen by one of the guards, who halted the group and demanded that they walk toward him for examination. The little Chink started to run, whereupon the guard pulled out a large revolver and fired, striking the Chinaman on the shoulder. He dropped to the ground and was grabbed and jerked to his feet and dragged to a standing position and he, with the other three was marched to the guard house.
There, with arms extended and quaking in every limb, the rough guardsman jerked their blouses open, and found all manner of valuable loot concealed in their flowing garments.
Though the little Chinaman was badly wounded and suffering terrible pain, he was shackled to his three brethren and bundled into the wagon and sent off to jail, his companions giving him what they understood to be first aid to the injured. That he was not instantly killed was due simply to the bad aim of the special officer that fired at him.
